As digital natives, teenagers are the direct influencers of social media. With the rapid development of the network, traditional media has suffered from the violent impact of new media. The new media quickly seized the media field by virtue of its fast spread and rich content, and it also had a major impact on young people's learning and social behavior. This article focuses on how to find valuable information in a variety of complex social media is a huge test of young people's information literacy. Multi-angle and interdisciplinary discussion on the impact of social media on the socialization of young people and their coping strategies.

1. Introduction

With the development of the Internet and the advent of the digital age, interactive communication based on mobile socialization has become an indispensable part of people's daily life [1]. Adolescents living in a social media environment have also become users and innovators of mobile socialization. The socialization process of young people has changed from a passive and slow recipient to a self-selected chemist [2]. Social media has brought about changes from the Internet to everyday life, and it has also brought challenges to social management and business management. The autonomy and arbitrariness of social media has made the ignorant teenagers who are not deeply involved in the world lose their self and resist the temptation [3]. In the era of rapid development of social media, teenagers are still immature in mind and full of curiosity about new things, so in the scope of social media, the group most affected is teenagers [4]. The role of mobile social networks in the daily life and study of teenagers is increasingly profound, and this role will become more and more prominent as they go out of school.

Social media is an important medium for people to spread information, show themselves and communicate interactively. At the same time, the rapid popularization of mobile Internet equipment has promoted the change of teenagers' Internet behavior. Among all kinds of application software, the usage rate of young netizens in all kinds of websites is higher than that of the overall netizen level [5]. In the Internet era with rapid development of information, social media has constructed a set of virtual and completely autonomous social growth environment, making teenagers grow into modern social youth in the conflict between virtual and reality [6]. Therefore, the application of social media has a greater impact on young people. In the era of mobile Internet, the weakening of social control, the dislocation of the socialized environment, the disorder of the socialization process, etc. will all be the direction in which young people should pay attention. The media literacy of young people needs to be improved, and the socialization process needs to be standardized [7]. Therefore, in the era of mobile Internet, how the majority of young people use new media to overcome the negative effects brought by new media, and create their own wonderful life seems to have a long way to go.
2. Socialization of young people using mobile social networks

2.1 Mobile social network and youth interpersonal interaction

Interpersonal interaction is a comprehensive process of examining a person's psychological activities and behavioral ability. As an important stage of life growth, adolescents are a key period for learning interpersonal communication. Learning to communicate and cooperate is an important goal of youth socialization. The socialization of people is to be produced through human interaction. The various forms of interpersonal interaction and the social relationships they generate are the basic materials that constitute the macro-social structure [8]. Teenagers are familiar with social norms, clearly understand their own characteristics and deficiencies, and successfully realize their social roles. The so-called acquaintance society is also a social network with kinship relations such as blood, geography, academic affiliation and business karma. However, in the virtual communication environment of the mobile internet era, the typical "acquaintance society" is showing a new characteristic of "quasi-acquaintance society" transformation. The influence of new media on teenagers' interpersonal communication and ideas is gradually strengthening [9]. The social function of social media not only has strong links between acquaintances, but also weak links between strangers, and can be transformed between the two. This social way of promoting strong links has changed the way and effect of people's interpersonal communication and is a revolutionary change in interpersonal communication and interaction.

Peer communication is an important part of interpersonal communication in the process of youth socialization, and social media has expanded the communication range of youth peer groups [10]. In addition to the students you know, you can also know more schools and friends from different countries and regions, which undoubtedly gives teenagers more space for communication. Whether we know each other or not, people can always find people with the same interests and common goals and people with similar experiences on social media, and gather together to discuss topics of common interest. This social way of promoting strong links has changed the way and effect of teenagers' interpersonal communication, and is a revolutionary change in interpersonal communication and interaction. Some teenagers who are weak or unable to care in the real world seek comfort in the online world. In the long run, they have regarded the Internet as a "home" and escaped from reality. Many behaviors that are frustrated in the real world and seek comfort in the virtual world of the Internet can only temporarily relieve the mood and not bring more real changes to the youth. Leading young people to dissatisfaction with their situation and status in reality, indulging in the virtual world and being unable to extricate themselves, unable to achieve socialized role-playing, leading to chaotic roles.

From the data point of view, teenagers have a clear understanding of the use of mobile social networks, can reasonably arrange study time and entertainment time. This conclusion conflicts with the research hypothesis I have done before. As shown in Figure 1.

2.2 Mobile social networks and youth social participation

Media socialization provides a broad platform for young people's social participation and expression of rights. The social participation of young people extends from the real society to the virtual world. In the era of mobile social networking, teenagers use mobile terminals to become self-media. Contemporary adolescents enjoy media resources more fully than any previous generation of adolescents, and their growth is more influenced by the media. The lack of awareness of adolescents’ prevention has led to an increased risk of social participation. The protection of teen privacy has become a huge challenge. The condition of traditional socialization is that young people must actually participate in the practice of social life. In the era of social media, teenagers only need to communicate with each other in the virtual world, which undoubtedly reduces the cost of socialization of teenagers and shortens the socialization time. People's mastery of knowledge is not limited by time and space. The order of socialization has also undergone uncertain changes. The boundaries of socialization have become blurred and blurred, shortening the process of human socialization in time. In the era of social media, due to unbalanced economic development and differences in knowledge and cultural level, people have obvious differences in the ways and quantities of information acquisition. Places with fast economic and scientific and technological development have a higher degree of socialization than places with low economic and technological development.

Social media has expanded the way teenagers acquire knowledge. In learning, social media has brought many convenient learning conditions to teenagers. The huge amount of information brought by social media challenges the authority of teachers. The network technology environment challenges the attitudes, beliefs and values held by authoritative people in the traditional socialization process. Society and schools can carry out correct ideological propaganda through social media, and play a guiding role in ideology for teenagers so that they can gradually absorb correct ideological education. Social media has changed the world's cultural environment and consumer attitudes. The values formed under traditional culture have gradually faded with the spread of new media. Students can easily get what the teacher doesn't know through social media, and the impact on young people's society is two-way. The good side is that children can learn independently and ask teachers and others at any time. The downside is that once a child is introduced into the social side, it is difficult for children to change their minds.

3. Analysis of youth social media applications

3.1 Social media two-sidedness

By looking at the overall situation of youth social media application behavior, we are inevitably worried. Social media is widely used in the youth community and is too dependent on social media. The emergence of the media has broadened the horizons of young people, but the negative impact of social media on young people is also very large, but the positive role of social media in broadening the horizons of young people can not be denied. Media socialization provides opportunities and challenges for the development of moral rationality for young people. The mobile social network world is full of mixed information. The mobile Internet era has broken the vertical and one-dimensional political information transmission path in the traditional media age. The youth socialization paradigm has changed from one-way to multi-interaction. The birth of new network media has weakened information control and opened the gap of one-way dissemination of political information. Although teenagers' dependence on mobile social networks is not very significant, its impact is far-reaching. If teenagers live in a virtual society for a long time and obtain satisfaction and interest in the virtual society, they will easily have a misunderstanding of the real society, which is not conducive to the healthy socialization of teenagers. Social media is heavily contacted by teenagers. As shown in Table 1, social media has become the main channel for them to obtain information, communicate with others and express their personal opinions.

Domestic research on the contact and use of social media mainly focuses on the current situation of college students' use of social media. It is found that the emergence of social media has greatly changed college students' interpersonal communication and lifestyle. The development of things is determined by both internal and external factors. The emergence of online social media makes it easy for teenagers to obtain various kinds of information, markets to share their opinions, interact with people at a distance, and obtain more information. The spread of social media goes to the era of judging ugliness. The purpose of communication in communication science must be to attract the audience instantly. No matter whether it is characterized by beauty or ugliness, it is the focus that people will never forget. In social media, everyone's cultural literacy and information literacy are uneven. It is hard to imagine the impact of your growth in such a cultural atmosphere on their cultural literacy, aesthetics and values. In the age of social media, young people's outlook on life, values and consumption have changed with the entertainment consumer culture. This change has both a positive side and a negative side.

3.2 Guide teens to properly apply social media

Using social media can form a healthy lifestyle, and using social media can form a good morality. Learn to use campus network education and family supervision to correct the habits of young people's Internet addiction, regularly promote the negative consequences of social media on the Internet, and limit the online time for teenagers to let them have less access to the Internet. Educators can communicate with young people through the social media commonly used by teenagers. In the conversation, they should appear in the culture of life and understand their psychology. Teach students to learn to judge bad media information. The education of teenagers has always been an important research topic for government educational institutions. In the application of social media, media literacy education of teenagers should be strengthened. The core literacy concept formulated by the government and educational institutions is to guide young people to learn to learn and live a healthy life, and to lead the socialization education of young people to the right path.

Since the Internet came into being, social media has become increasingly popular. Traditional socialization methods have been greatly challenged. People's social activities have been reduced and network communication has been strengthened. In social media, everyone can meet and chat every day. Anything can be solved in a timely manner through social software. Teenagers rely too much on social media. Except for the campus, most of their interpersonal activities are conducted in social media. Face-to-face communication and parties are gradually decreasing. Teenagers can freely participate in social circle and cultural group activities according to their interests and hobbies in social media to form their own cultural circle, and the subculture environment in these circles exerts a subtle influence on teenagers' ideas and value judgment. Establishing and improving the common system of family, school and society is the only way for the social education of young people. The lack of any link can lead to the imbalance and deviation of education. Let young people establish a correct outlook on life and values in the use of social media, and cultivate independent critical and discerning abilities through diverse socialized knowledge.
4. Summary

With the rapid development of modernization of information technology, social media has gradually integrated into our lives, which has both negative and positive impacts on our lives. The complexity and variability of social education encourages young people to accept the content and methods of socialized education. Family, school and media will affect the process of socialization to varying degrees. As an important way of social education, social media has an important impact on all aspects. The process of socialization of young people is affected by the media social environment, which increases the difficulty of controlling their social growth and leads to an increase in the factors of socialization instability. The virtual world is an extension of the real world, and the medium is only a tool to convey information to people in places beyond their reach. Therefore, the virtual information transmitted by social media is ultimately the expression of real society. As a double-edged sword, social media must learn to make use of its advantages and discard its dross so as to create convenience for life.
